

Our First Impact Report

2020-2022

Introduction

Agrarian Trust grew from the frustration of landless farmers, out of a profound desire to participate in our own survival, in our own liberation. When we gathered the first circle at Paicines Ranch in California, OUR LAND symposia in 2014, we formed a “people’s design assembly” where we each brought our experiences and analysis to confront the structural crisis of land access for regenerative agriculture—as young farmers, conservationists, agricultural historians, lawyers, economists, new economists, activists—asking ourselves: what does the land want? Together we researched Elinor Ostrom and Vinoba Bhave, Henry George and Leo Tolstoy. We looked at the community land trust movement, Terre de Liens in France, historical land reform movements, and Indigenous land governance. We found a law firm in Sustainable Economies Law Center who were tuned to the patterns of council so common across human history as pastoralists, tree cultures and Indigenous land managers that remained in constant feedback with the source ecology and with the spirit of the landscape. We looked squarely at the historical enclosure, land theft, expropriation, and violence so central to U.S. history... central to empires. We listened to our elders challenging us to aim for long-term and restorative tenure, a kind of tenure compatible with generations past and future. We considered the real and immediate needs of resource-limited farmers who are acting in the best interest of the land itself.

Agrarian Trust now holds seven farms in six states, with a total of 415 acres of farmland held in common, with secure, affordable, dignified tenure for the farmers—retiring from the marketplace forever more than $7.2 million in land. Each parcel, each commons, is overseen by a board of advisors who looks after the interests and accompanies the decisions, and co-creates a generative destiny for the farm organisms. In a country where 98 percent of land is owned by white owners, Agrarian Trust has attracted diversity, talent, and ambition to its leadership and stewardship. Of the Agrarian Commons board members, 36 percent are Black, Indigenous, and people of color and 66 percent are women, trans, or non-binary. Seventy-five percent of long-term leases are held by BIPOC farmers.

Working Together, with land.

Agrarian Trust seeks to heal centuries of alienation from the land, allowing communities to rejoin the gift, the wellspring of ecological health on land and farms that sustain us, forming a spiritual pact with one another to not abuse, to not coerce, to not extract or profiteer, but to hold the gift carefully together. This next phase of our work can be extraordinary, already 36 foundations, 21 donor-advised funds and more than 2,494 people from 48 states and seven countries have donated to this work of the Agrarian Commons. We invite you to join us as a donor, as a farmer, as a board member, as an eater, as a supporter, and as part of the Agrarian Trust family.

Over a few days, then a few months, and then a few years, we laid out the principles and recruited the teammates that would become the Agrarian Commons, a new format for holding land in common. Our goal, then as now, is to help co-create an emancipation of our commodified earth. Each in our own locality, to inhabit a new kind of belonging and mutuality on a human scale and to take responsibility for that work. We wanted to hold and be held by a commons, we wanted to uphold the kinds of social and economic relations that truly allow for regenerative agriculture. We wanted to practice out loud, in person, and in front of everyone, the principles shared by countless land reform movements and struggles for freedom. We wanted to let the farmers farm and to let the land sing, and to do so in a way that could spread all across this country!

Publications & Press

Aljazeera

The work of Agrarian Trust is featured in Aljazeera's podcast, The Take, in the September 21, 2022 episode called, "How are Black American farmers reclaiming their land?" Through the Agrarian Commons, communities of color are transforming land ownership in the US.

Commoners Catalog

Find Agrarian Trust in "The Commoner's Catalog for Changemaking, Tools for the Transition Ahead", which is born of a simple realization: The world we have inherited is no longer working. The good news is that Commoners are building a new world of possibilities right now, through land trusts and relocalized food, collaborative finance and artist collectives, gift economies and open-source everything: essential tools for the transitions ahead.

America's Test Kitchen's Proof Podcast

What does it mean to set up a farm--for and by a minority community--in a predominantly white region? Reporter Ashia Aubourg digs in. A sound journey that tells an amazing story, episode 6 from season 9 of Proof, a podcast from America's Test Kitchen, showcases the Somali Bantu Community Association, the founding farmers of the Agrarian Commons located in Maine.

Equity in Ag Production & Governance

How can the 2023 Farm Bill expand access to land and credit for marginalized producers? As a member organization of the National Family Farm coalition, Agrarian Trust is participating in the creation of recommendations for how policymakers can use the 2023 Farm Bill to increase access to land, credit, and education for marginalized producers, advance equity across USDA programs, facilitate farmland transitions to disadvantaged farmers and more.

Barriers for Farmers & Ranchers To Adopt Regenerative Ag Practices in the US

In this Patagonia-sponsored report, author Jennifer O'Connor highlights the key barriers our farmers and ranchers are facing in moving towards a healthy, resilient, and regenerative food and ag system. In the report, Agrarian Trust and the Agrarian Commons model are featured as examples of critical pathways supporting the breaking down of these barriers.

FaithLands Toolkit

The FaithLands Toolkit serves as a guide to support faith communities in considering their respective spiritual traditions and linking those core values and beliefs to the land. Through case studies and thoughtful conversation, it offers ways to join a growing number of faith traditions in the production of food, the support of basic human needs, and the building of resilient communities, while also promoting equity and justice through the land. This resource is available as a free digital download, or as a print copy.

Bollier

In his article "Saving Farmland, Supporting Young Farmers", David Bollier interviews both Severine von Tscharner Fleming and Ian McSweeney about Agrarian Trust and the Agrarian Commons. David Bollier is an author, activist, blogger and consultant who spends a lot of time exploring the commons as a new paradigm of economics, politics and culture.

For the Wild

Podcast For the Wild explores what land redistribution could look like and how land can be emancipated from the commodity structure with guest Severine von Tscharner Fleming. How do we navigate the settler desire to own land? How can our understanding of the commons invite us into collective commitment to caring for the land and staving of speculative land privatization? In response to these questions, Severine shares the messiness and opportunity of living amongst the prosperity of extraction in the spaces we inhabit while dedicating ourselves to a land-based livelihood that awakens the call to live inside of accountability to people and place.

Collaborative Farming Podcast

We've heard about land trusts, conservation easements, maybe community trusts before, but what if there was one modeled with the farm and the farmer in mind? The mission of Agrarian Land Trust is to build local Agrarian Commons to hold farmland to ensure its sustainable and productive stewardship for generations to come. Former Director Ian McSweeney tells us how Agrarian Commons work, why they're an important model, and where to begin.

Flock Finger Lakes

American fashion model, environmental activist, author, and entrepreneur, known as the world's first "eco-model", Summer Rayne Oakes hosted Agrarian Trust for an interview on her YouTube channel, giving an overview of the national non-profit, the Agrarian Commons model, and examples of how it is working across the country.

Forbes

Lisbet Portman interviewed former Director of Agrarian Trust, Ian McSweeney, in “For Next Gen Farmers, Evolving The Land Trust Structure Is Key”. The discussion explores McSweeney’s background that brought him to this career, how Agrarian Trust is different from other land trusts, and why the mission and work of Agrarian Trust is so critically needed.

New Farmer’s Almanac

A publication from Greenhorns, the New Farmer’s Almanac features essays and stories and poems from farmers, ranchers, ecologists, educators, food bank managers, grocers, gardeners, researchers, and advocates bound by their care for the land, the food system, and the survival of the natural world.

The Guardian

In their article, “We’re trying to re-create the lives we had: the Somali migrants who became Maine farmers” journalist Audrea Lim tells of the community of Somali Bantu farmers who struggled for land security until the farm justice activists of the Agrarian Trust lent a hand.

Go Farm, Young People, and Help Heal the Country

Associate Professor of American Environmental Studies Brian Donahue presents a vision for rural revitalization which includes accessible land and economic support for farms as vital goals and how the Agrarian Commons can help.

NPR & PBS

In “Reparations and restitution through land donation: an interview with Duron Chavis and Callie Walker”, reporter Angie Miles explores the inspiration behind the land gift that seeded the Central Virginia Agrarian Commons, and the need for acts of reparations to heal historical and current injustices.

Towards a More Equitable Farming Future

Land Policy Towards a More Equitable Farming Future

A 2020 Report released by the National Young Farmers Coalition. Land, policy, and power are closely intertwined. As millions of acres of U.S. farmland are changing hands, public policy holds the responsibility and the promise to facilitate land justice for the next generation of growers.

High Mowing Organic Seed Catalog

The 2023 High Mowing Organic Seed Catalog featured the Agrarian Commons on the cover, and centered the work of Agrarian Trust in an in-depth feature story.

Reuters

In the article, “Black farming projects look to recoup historical U.S. land losses”, journalist Carey L. Biron tells the story of the Central Virginia Agrarian Commons, and the Southwest Virginia Agrarian Commons, two Agrarian Commons which have worked to secure land access and tenure for Black farmers within USDA-defined food deserts.

Sum of Us

On the heels of her bestselling book, Heather McGhee embarks on a road trip across Covid-era America, unearthing stories of American solidarity and hope in a time of great division and peril. In her podcast, Sum of Us, McGhee highlights the collaboration between Agrarian Trust, the Little Jubba Central Maine Agrarian Commons, and the Somali Bantu Community Association.

Local Futures Action Guide

The Localization Action Guide from Local Futures / Economics of Happiness is an amazing free and open-source resource to help you find your role in creating a more localized, just, democratic, and healthy environment and society. Agrarian Trust is honored to be listed in this guide.

Writing the Land

A project of NatureCulture, Writing the Land is a sustainable-food-production-and-art-themed anthology that brings together poets and land protection and anti-hunger organizations from across the US. Poems, essays, and Information about the missions of these partners for foodways and social justice are included in this unique book. This year’s anthology includes contributions from poets who visited Agrarian Commons land, and an essay on community land trusts and the Agrarian Commons.

At Agrarian Trust, our particular interest in the “Commons” is farmland and the necessity of community centered protection and ownership so that it stays productive and chemical free in perpetuity. We know that we all need to eat and that the most nutritious and life-sustaining foods are grown on land where the soil is toxin-free and cared for regeneratively. Our solution to keeping productive farms and soils alive and well for generations to come is the creation of the Agrarian Commons.

The Agrarian Commons provides a pathway to community land ownership that addresses the current realities of how land is owned, how tenure and equity are conveyed, and how land stewardship is carried out. This structure challenges corporate and large-scale agriculture land-ownership and offers a new, sustainable approach for the small and mid-size farmer.

The “Caring for the Commons Fund” is Agrarian Trust’s Annual Fund. Annual Funds encourage donors to give at least annually and in many cases monthly, to help support the overhead costs that most grants and many individual donors do not fund.
